

Canada's Southern Sanctuary

You've arrived!

Point Pelee National Park protects a great diversity of unique Carolinian habitats and the plant and wildlife species that call them home. Many you can't see anywhere else in Canada!

Located at the crossroads of major migration routes, this tiny green sand spit offers sanctuary each spring and fall to thousands of migrating birds, butterflies, bats and dragonflies.

Over the last 10,000 years, many people have also called this place home. Caldwell First Nation considers Point Pelee as "our home" and Walpole Island First Nation as part of "our house." Over the last 175 years, homesteaders, naturalists, fisherman, farmers, hunters, cottagers, campers, picnickers, sunbathers and sightseers have all made footprints which have shaped the park as we know it today.

Enjoy your day and make your own footprints at
